Now that the operations for the construction of water-works have commenced, we think it right to discuss the matter in one point of view which it is impossible to neglect. We have with us our daily public journals. We take it in hand as a matter affecting the public health.

When this matter was first undertaken the public was given to understand that the water was to be brought from a point high enough to rise to keep clear of any of those sources of impurity which the presence of a city on a river bank always furnishes. At that time we were decidedly in favor of water-works for the city, and we said that at that time we had not been informed of the conditions under which they were to be constructed, nor did we become known, as our readers are well aware, until after the contract was drawn up and signed. We felt that we had been deceived.
